Breaking of Tariff Barriers Only Key to Prosperity, Say Economists

INTERDEPENDENCE OF NATIONS STRESSED

Farmers of World Hit by Abnormal Increase in Manufactures, League Experts Show

By HUGH F. SPENDER SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MO GENEVA-The economic interdependence of world industry and com-merce is a fact which few people now dispute. For the war finally dis-posed of the theory that the prosperity of one nation could be obtained at the expense of another that trade was a kind of warfare in which victory was to be won by ousting a rival from the markets of the world.

The downfall of Germany and the central powers, instead of increasing the prosperity of Great Britain, for instance, contributed to unemployment in that country. The destruction of wealth, the dislocation of trade and the diminution in the consuming power of all the nations of Europe reacted on victorious and defeated countries alike. All were seen to be dependent on the maintenance of a general standard of prosperity.

This was the doctrine which the economists preached at the International Economic Conference in 1927, when they warned nations against the pursuit of a strictly nationalist policy in trade as harmful not only who practiced it. Post-war methods who practiced it. Post-war methods of import and export prohibitions and the raising of tariffs were denounced as calculated to defeat their end. States were told that if they wished to be prosperous, they must abandon the illusion that they could become self-sufficient units in the economic selfnomic sense. The experts could en-force their arguments by pointing to solation as pursued for nine years after the war. It was time, they said, that the world began to understand that prosperity is not something which can be enjoyed in small com-

Progress Promising

In seeking to appraise, in accordance with the tradition of our annual reunions, the progress of the preceding year, we find to be most promising these endeavors of the institutes and societies devoted to the study of international law and to the interests of peace, both on this side of the Atlantic and in Europe, which are at last bringing us to something like a concrete program of codifica-tion, looking to an early interna-tional conference to deal with spe-

In truth, the law in legislative, form can never completely meet the needs of any community. The machinery for the application of principles through judicial action in the determination of controversies is the indispensable requisite of any legal order, that is, of institutions of peace, whether it is domestic or international.

Whatever may be our attitude to-Whatever may be our attitude to-ward special forms of international organization, these categories of pa-cific means are the irreducible mini-mum of any fair interpretation of the pledge. Whatever opposition there may have been to the giving of this pledge, now that it has been given, the honor of the country re-quires the faithful performance of it.

It was in this spirit that the Pan-American treaties of obligatory ar-bitration and conciliation were nego-tiated at the recent conference in Washington, another important achievement of the year.

Mr. Root's Work at Geneva

Another outstanding event of the year is the visit of our veteran lurist and statesman to Geneva in the interest of the adherence of the United States to the Protocol of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and his success in finding a way out of the impasse that has existed. I trust that in the consideration of the details of the present proposal, the fundamental questions that are involved will not be obscured.

What are the fundamental questions? The first is—Should there be provision for the judicial settlement of international disputes? That question admits of but one answer. I have already pointed out how limited indeed how impotent, is the law without its tribunal to apply it; how treaties between states, law-making treaties or others, like agreements in the municipal sphere, must have their judicial interpreters.

The most obvious sort of "pacific means" to which we are pledged, is that of the exercise of the judicial function wherever that function is appropriate.

function wherever that function is appropriate.

It is undeniably appropriate when the questions are those of law, and the application of law to the facts as ascertained, and when international agreements are to be interpreted and the appropriate redress of breaches determined. The promises of the Anti-War Treaty, which our Government has negotiated and ratified, must be deemed to require resort to Judicial settlement of this class of questions.

Juridical Questions

Juridical Questions

The Pan-American treaties specifically list the following as among questions of a juridical character: "(a) the interpretation of a treaty;
(b) any question of international law; (c) the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation: and (d) the nature and extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international

This is a familiar classification long approved by jurists. To refuse judicial settlement of such questions would be to treat the Kellogg Pact as a mere scrap of paper.

Judicial settlement requires judges.
Who are to be the judges of an international controversy? Certainly, not either of the parties to the dispute. No nation can make good its pledge to seek settlement of its international controversies of a juridical character only by neither cal character only by pacific means and insist on being the judge of its own case.

The next question is—What shall be the the tribunal? The choice is plainly between arbitrators selected for a particular case or a permanent international court. I do not fail to recognize the great value of the establishment of a permanent international court.

Certainly, the permanent court would be better than an umpire, or third or fith arbitrator, selected by lot, or chosen by third persons, where the parties to the dispute were unable to agree as would frequently be the case.

Only One Court

If a permanent could is desirable—what permanent court shall it be?
The answer is that there is but one, and so far as we can see into the future, there will be but one—the Permanent Court of International Justice at The Hague. It is supported by about 50 states. It has performed its functions successfully for seven years with a gratifying degree of confidence reposed in it, as is shown by the increasing volume of its work.

Whether we go "in" or stay "out" of the Court, advisory opinions would not have the binding effect of a judgment. It is their moral weight, their effect on general opinion throughout the world, and not their technical bearing, that may be deemed important.

The fundamental questions then are—What do we gain in this respect by a refusal to support the Permanent Court of International Justice? What should we lose in this respect if we did support this institution of Cannot Stop Advisory Opinions As to the first, it is apparent that advisory opinions will be given, when it is deemed to be appropriate, if the United States does not join in supporting the Court. The continued abstention of the United States will not prevent such opinions.

If, however, there was a claim of interest on our part in some matter as to which an advisory opinion was asked, and there was a serious question as to the existence of that interest, we should be in a much stronger position, as it seems to me, were we supporting the Court and made our objection, with the right of withdrawal of our adherence in case our protest were unavailing, case our protest were unavailing, than if we stood aloof altogether. Without reciting the precise terms of the draft protocol adopted by the Committee of Jurists in relation to the adherence of the United States, it is sufficient for the present pur pose to point out that they afford a definite opportunity for objection on the part of the United States to the giving of advisory opinions as to a matter in which it claims an in-terest, and that the required deliberate consideration of such an objection would furnish a suitable means of protection of the interests of the United States. The necessity of having recourse to the right of withdrawal from ad-herence to the protocol of the Court would seem to be very remote.

Conciliation Also Needed To this support of judicial settle-ment should be added appropriate participation in conciliatory measures in relation to controversies of -juridical character,

Our Government is not a member of the League of Nations and cannot participate as a member in its activities. It may, however, appropriately take part, and has always been ready to take part, in international conferences in the interest of peace. When, a few years ago, we were dealing with difficult situations in the Far East, there was negotiated and ratified what is called the Four Power Treaty between the United States, the British Empire, France and Japan, in which it was agreed that if there should develop between any of the parties a controversy arising out of any Pacific question and involving their rights, as stated, which was not satisfactorily settled by diplomacy and was likely to affect the harmonious accord now happily subsisting between them, they should invite the other parties to a joint conference to which the whole subject would be referred for consideration and adjustment.

Alliances are opposed to our policy; conferences in the interests of peace are not. ### Britain Eager to Push Accord With America on Arms Reduction abandons the hypocrisy of ghypotheses for specific reality.

But these are intricate questions and cannot be rushed. Agreement must first be reached about methods of calculation, which would allow the naval powers to adjust their agreed tonnages to their respective needs. It is hoped that this may be done without undue delay. It will then be for the details to be worked out, perhaps in a naval subcommittee of the Preparatory Commission.

Meantime it is not easy to see why the military powers should not be given a chance of getting on with the work of reducing land and air armaments. They can no longer plead the excuse that naval deadlock stands in the way.

Britain Sees New Hope of Rapprochement

With United States LONDON - Ramsay MacDonald peaking at Buxton, indicated that in Labor party opinion the question of Anglo-American naval disarmament must now be settled by direct negotiation at London and Washington. After welcoming Mr. Gibson's state-ment Mr. MacDonald said: "The question is not so much one of limitation but of reduction of armaments. It is no good sending naval officers to discuss the reduction of armaments, because it is their job to consider the negotiations from the other side of the technique of armaments. You will never get the matter settled that way. It is a

Under the system, if a member bank wants a loan it goes to the the fact that two foreign banks of Reserve bank to obtain it. Ordinarily it deposits some form of commercial paper as security or collateral for this loan. The Reserve bank makes the loan at a fixed interest rate, known as the Reserve rate. If the Reserve bank feels that too many loans are being made and that dangerous expansion is in prospect, it rate. It is charged that the American raises its discount rate. That makes it more expensive to get funds, and in normal times it checks loans. Again, an outflow of gold may be threatened to some other nation. By raising the discount rates, the Reserve bank in normal times makes it more profitable to keep the gold

But the present is anything but a normal time, and the discount rate has not proved effective, in the pass six years, in reducing speculation What happened was simply this. Private banks, which are members of the Reserve System, were not convinced of the need of precautionary measures. They did not need to secure funds from the Reserve banks by way of discount, and accordingly ignored

Congress provided expedients to meet such a situation as this and it is in applying these expedients that to the speculator to plunge more causes the major problem confronting the Reserve Board, of which Roy A. Young is head, and Andrew W Mellon, ex-officio member.

New York Group Agrees With Chicago Fellows Acting as "Coroner's Jury" That Young People Are Not Inherently "Wild"

NEW YORK - Educators here cation. agree with the findings of the Chicago educators who, acting as a Shortage in Oils declared that responsibility for youthful observance of dry laws begins with the parents, should next be assumed by the schools and the press, and carried on by law enforcement agencies.

In response to a request for opinions on the question of liquor drinking among the youth of America, made by The Christian Science Monitor, educators here are in accord in fixing the blame on liquor itself, Dr. Samuel L. Hamilton, professor young people today "as the result of wrong ideas of what is worth while." Education that would not be ly instruction, but a true character reconstruction carried through on the dynamic of vital religion," was the only solution, he said.

Calls for Good Example

Prof. Gilbert Raynor, principal of the Alexander Hamilton Commer-cial High School in Brooklyn, declared that parents, school officials. there develops any indication that the oil interests intend to use conand held that if the citizenship of of an artificial shortage, the organ-the grown-ups of today was as good as that of the young people, "we would be getting along very much better.

"Young people are seeking what they call 'living,'" Dr. Hamilton said. "Because of the bad example set them by adults, the powerful suggestions of some motion picture plays which pander to the interest in the morbid and vicious; sensational newspapers and those who have an interest in undermining the influ ence of certain laws, young people naturally reach wrong conclusions about what is desirable in life.

"They develop a taste for excite ment and stimulation, for jazz, speed, chance-taking and lawlessness. When they are being assured that all smart people are violating the prohibition law, it is not curious that they should follow adult precept and example and complicate all their problems with alcohol.

"The gap is bigger, perhaps,

Young people must learn that there is more adventure, romance and thrill in a good life than in the vulgar excitements in which they now seek to find real life. Edu-cation of the right sort will impress them with this, but it needs to be transformative rather than informative education. It must not so much mpart facts as empower lives." "Such occurrences as the one that has just been brought so tragically to our attention in Chicago, Protessor Raynor said, "are a most sad commentary on the parents, on the school officials and the on the city government of Chicago. The fact of the matter is that if our grown-ups would be as good citizens as our young people, we would be getting along very much better.

Youth Never Drier, He Says Professor Raynor declared that he believed this condition did not obtain in New York City. He had not seen a pocket flask in evidence for more than five years at the social affairs of his school, he said.

"Nothing approaching any such condition exists in New York City. I am completing my thirty-fourth year as high school teacher and principal here and I have never known a time when our people were as free from the blighting effect of intoxicating liquor as at present. The beer-stupefied the ragged, shoeless and hungry boy of the old saloon days is no longer in evidence, in person or by proxy.

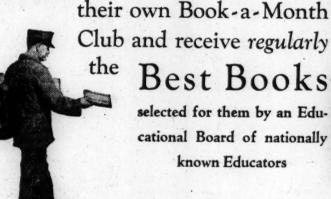

"I attend practically all of the many social affairs of the nearly 4000 boys of this high school, but I have not for more than five years seen a pocket flask among them nor any evidence of any indulgence in intoxicating liquor. Doubtless there are some high school pupils who think it smart to carry flasks, but this is not peculiar to prohibition. It has always existed to some extent.

"If these people who are so tireessly finding fault with prohibition would use half as much energy to help in its enforcement and the building up of a respect for all law and in setting an example of law observance, a large share of our present social evils would speedily disappear."

Well-Colored Copy of Clipper Sold for $500-Tiny Craft Reach High of $3500

By CARL GREENLEAF BEEDE SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU NEW YORK-Some of the N. Currier lithographs of sailing ships, sold this week at the Anderson Galleries in New York as high as $500, probably brought 100 times their original cost, when issued in 1854. I say probably, for data is not at hand covering sel of the Southern Pacific Company.
these early prices. It seems unlikely
The method of acquiring control has that the large folio size produced in quantities by lithography would have sold at first for more than $5 each.

The top figure mentioned took a well-colored copy of "Clipper Ship Nightingale," dated 1854. The same date was on "The Clipper Ship Lightning," which went for $475. The scarcity of these prints rather than their artistic merits seems to determine their cash value, for several equally early and nearly as good work brought from $65 to $75. Among these last were three of "The Dreadnaught," and one each "The Ocean Express" and "Three Brothers."

London Specimens Sold London lithographs and engravings of shipping dated between 1800 and 1855 ran from $12.50 to $160, with $30 as an estimated average. The high just named, was brought by an engraving entitled "Truxton's Victory," printed on the reverse side of a scene concerning George Washing-ton. This pecular feature gave it spe-cial value, by collectors' standards.

Paintings of ships by contemporary artists shared favor with those of the 1850s. Canvases of Carlton Chapman and T. Bailey, present-day Americans; sold as high as $525, while J. Heard's and T. A. Jamison's English work of the earlier sort reached $475 reached $475.

When ship models were put up the work of recent years climbed to high figures. Several American craft changed owners at bids of $130 to $200, Flying Cloud going for $550 and Constitution for $600. Both of the latter were built to scale. finely constructed, and completely equipped and rigged.

Used as Whaling Museum It might seem that there is no limit to what one might spend for these miniature ships, now so popular for decorative uses. Four sold for $2000 or more, the peak being the final bid of $3500 for the whaler Charles W.

of $3500 for the whaler Charles W. Morgan, made about 1920.

The original craft built in 1840, is now restored and used as a whaling museum, the property of Colonel Green at South Dartmouth, Mass. The model's excellence of workmanshin and its exact and complete details of equipment and rigging are said to make it one of the finest existing miniatures of an American whaler.

The necessities of the war had speeded up the wheels of industry, and the factories and mines of Europe were better equipped in 1925 than in 1913. prosperity of nations was being held up by their failure to realize the great lesson of economic interde-

Not only, said the experts at the Economic Conference, must there be a united effort for greater liberty in commerce, but the rationalization of industries must be carried out on an international as well as on a national basis, so as to remove the obstacles to trade and production caused by a purely national policy of standardization. Nations were exhorted to pool the results of their investigations concerning the best means of saving waste and cheapen-ing production; international indussphere of heavy industry, were rec-ommended as a means of reducing dirigibles has been announced by Dr. Georg Wegener, vice-president of the International Aeroarctic Society.

Prosperity by Co-operation

Thus the experts proclaimed not only the fundamental axiom that world industry and commerce were interdependent, but laid down the lines by which Europe might achieve prosperity by giving practical appli-cation to this idea. Since then, the economic section of the League of Nations has continued its investigations. Indexes have been prepared, showing the growth of population, the production of essential raw ma-terials and foodstuffs and the extent of the world's trade.

The world's industrial production is seen to be increasing even more rapidly than the production of raw materials and foodstuffs. Thus in the United States, manufacturing output in terms of fixed values was in 1925 between 60 and 65 per cent greater than in 1914, whereas the raw materials index was 127. In Canada the gross real value of manufactured products rose by about 45 per cent between 1910 and 1923, while the net and eastern Siberia. It is not yet devalue added in manufacture, which termined if there is a large tract of is a better measure of industrial growth, increased in Australia between 1913 and 1924-25 by a third, and in New Zealand by 88 per

He is in fact one of the ested in investigating the line of victims of high tariffs and restrictions on trade, while he suffers from coasts of the arctic continents as other maladjustments in the economic sphere; and the fall in his purchasing power reacts adversely in its turn on the revival of industry

Why the Farmer Loses

The farmer suffers in America as well as in Europe, for in the United states the wholesale price index of now called Northland, which has been seen but is entirely intexplored, is also to be mapped from the air.

"The party likewise hopes to learn more of the ocean currents, particularly what becomes of the warm water which pours constantly into the nearly land-locked Arctic Ocean. It appears that the floating ice of the polar sea presses unceasingly from the region of east-Siberia toward Spitzbergen and Greenland.

"The greatest pool of resource on the earth is the United States," he "and it is clear beyond argument that the essential corner stone of national defense should be provision for use of our resource in war. I will venture the statement that this pool is so great that, if properly organized, it could not only resist any attack-it could keep the peace of

The subject discussed by Mr. Baruch was "The Economics of Modern War." He spoke particularly of the evils of price fixing, profiteering and dissipation of resources through wastefulness with consequent post-war depressions.

Favors Strong Defense

Mr. Baruch advocated strengthening of national defense to enable America to exert the best influence peace over the world. A system of boards and administrative committees similar to that which functioned in war times should be set up with broad powers to classify and mobilize the national resource. In the event of another emergency, he added, the President should have the power to declare that prices on the "latest day previous to the emergency" on all commodities and services should remain the same.

"As to national aggrandizement, Baruch asserted, "President Wilson fathered a doctrine that shall always

Dancing on the Green

"What do you think," she cried as she ran into the shop. "There's a fiddler come to the village. He's playing such wonderful tunes, and we've been dancing to them on the green." At that moment the strains of a fiddle were heard, and Mary ran to the window, clapping her hands ex-

"Good evening to you," greeted Cornelius. "You have traveled far, I presume?"
"Good evening, Cornelius," said the Fiddler, who had seen the Cobbler's name on the front of the shop. "Yes, I have traveled far, indeed, and yours is a hilly country. Your roads are so stony that my shoes are well-nigh worn out. I have called to see if you can mend them for me, and I must wait while you do them, for I'm a poor

Ah! they're a bad lot. You have left them far too long. Toes nearly through, soles well-nigh off, and hardly any heel! 'Twill cost ye three shillings to have them done properly, Mr. Fiddler."

But the Fiddler shook his head. But the Fiddler shook his head.
"Three shillings is more than I have," he said "It cannot be done."

Now Cornelius had a kind heart, and many were the pairs of shoes he had mended in the past for people had mended in the past for people.

The fiddler shook his head.

"And I wish to discuss it as law, not as to the merits or demerits of a particular law but all law, federal and state, for ours is a government machinery." had mended in the past for people who could ill afford to pay for them, and he had charged them much less than his ordinary fees. So as the Fiddler was about to go he stopped him and said, "Bide a minute though. Now, how would it be, as you cannot pay me in money, if you were to pay me in kind? Mary, my niece, ould like it, aye, and so would I."

"In kind?" said the Fiddler. BOOK "RADIANT with the love and understanding of the child's interests." "Well," said Cornelius, "'tis like this. Mary and I be fond of music, and we don't often hear a fiddle hereabouts. No doubt you'll think me queer old sort, but there's always some kind of tune running through my head when I'm cobbling at you shoes, and whether you believe it or not, every pair I cobble seems to have a kind of tune to fit it. How would it be now, if ye were to play for Mary and me some tunes to fit in with some of yon shoes—to express their meaning, like?"

A Poet at Heart "Cornelius," cried the Fiddler, "I see you are a poet at heart! You find music in your cobbling just as I find it in the hills and dales and rushing

The record alone permits indicerts at the end of the Paris prodigality, there is one which, by vidual study in the home of a symits inception, gives food for thought: it is a "Ballade" of Albert Doyen, written for contralto solo, chorus of children and orchestra. This work which, outwardly, does not seem to differ very much from so many other works, sets forth, all the same, with disturbing simplicity, a problem of

Have you reflected at all upon the part that music plays in the present civilization, and more particularly in that of France? Certainly, the technique of composition has developed, been perfected and endlessly varied.

Technically, music is progressing with giant strides, annexing sound effects of indisputable novelty with unparalleled avidity. In the realm of harmony and in that of timbre, more and more daring explorations and ore and more fertile prospections

But the secondary rôle which music ing company, which no longer thinks should play, which allows Amphion of anything but the splendid advento build towns and Orpheus to make peace reign among the wild beasts, seems little by little to have become an essentially egotistic game. A mu-sician, an author, tends to think only of himself, or of a very limited little group of friends who constitute a closed aristocracy. One marvels that the public is not enthusiastic about French masterpieces. It is because they feel very definitely that these masterpieces have not been of his mystery ship is realized with written for them, but have been, if unusual cleverness and astonishing, one may say so, constructed "against" them, like a shield or bulwark. The crowd is systematically excluded from these delicate delights.

A Grave Mistake Is there any need to stress the grave mistake that artists commit in refusing, in a country like France, to abandon this narrow individual-ism that has become clearly anof human activity. Music cannot escape from it. It should take this escape from it. It should take this new orientation of the life of the people into consideration or disap-

Most varnishes look alike too. But which varnish is the right varnish for the surface you want to finish?

Let Sherwin-Williams decide your varnish problems for you, because they make three principal varnishes. Each is designed to suit the requirements of a specific type of surface.

Varnishes must be adapted to the various types of surface needs. That is the only way to insure both beauty and durability in your varnish finish.

S-W REXPAR, for exposed surfaces, protects with a rich, permanent finish that defies sun and rain.

S-W SCAR-NOT, for woodwork and furniture, covers with a beautiful, natural gloss. Polishing makes it even more lustrous.

S-W MAR-NOT, for floors, covers severe scuffing does not mar.

A fourth Varnish, Velvet 1044, should be used on furniture where a rich "dull" finish is desired.

EIGHT CLUBS HAVE A CHANCE TO PLACE NO. 1

LONDON—Soccer's tangled skein—top end of the standing in the southern section of the third division of the English Association Football League—became still more involved Wednesday by Crystal Palace's defeat at the hands, or rather feet, of Bournemouth, while Walford beat Gillingham, In the previous midweek sames In the previous mid-week games Chariton Athletic won against Brent-ford and Queen's Park Rangers lost unexpectedly to Norwich City, which added an unexpected twist to possi-

Now Charlton and Queen's Park Now Charlton and Queen's Park Rangers lead 50 points apiece, Northampton Town has 49, Fulham Town, Luton and Crystal Palace all have 48, Walford 47 and Plymouth Argyle 46. The only position that really matters at the end of the season is the top and only one team is promoted at a time from each section in the third division and every one of these eight clubs could get there. The first four names have two matches still to play, while the others have three.

W. S. C. VARSITY TRACK OUTLOOK

Seven Lettermen Are Lost but Supporters Look for a Good Season

Special to The Christian Science Montrox Pullman, Wash.—While seven lettermen from last year's team are missing this season, the State College of Washington track and field prospects for 1929 are promising and W. S. C. supporters are looking forward to another successful campaign. The Pullman team is slated to be exceptionally strong in the sprints, fair in the middle distances and jumps, weak in the hurdles, shot put and javelin throw and fair in the discus throw, according to Karl A. Schlademan, formerly of the University of Kansas, who is in his third season as head track coach at Washington State.

Those missing from last year's team include Capt. R. M. Williams, mile and half-mile star; H. R. Hoon, hurdle ace; and proved the star of the season as head track coach at Washington State.

Te Build Field House

Unfavorable weather has held back the Washington State cinder men and Coach Schlademan has given only light work. With prospects of warmer weather the Cougar runners will hit top speed in their preparation for the first outside competition May 4. This is the last season the W. S. C. track men will be handicapped by severe weather, as a large field house is expected to be completed by next season and the performers will be able to receive full measure of practice indoors when the outer elements are disagreeable.

Outstanding among Washington State track men this season will be Wesley L. Foster '30, sprinter and nationally recognized performer. As a sophomore last year, Foster won both the 100-yard and 220-yard dashes at the Pacific Coast Conference track meet. To Build Field House older Hein is accredited with a mark of 155 feet made last year. C. A. Markham '31, and G. E. Hill '31, are recruits from last year's frosh in the weight events, while F. R. Simpson '30, was a squad member last year.

Three candidates, all new men, are trying out in the javelin throw I. E. trying out in the javelin throw. L. E. Purnell '30, has made some good marks in high school and freshman competition and is expected to develop into a regular varsity performer. J. J. Koegler '29, is a fair tosser who may break into the scoring ranks. D. B. Hamilton '29, was a member of the squad of last year. WELSH SCHOOLBOYS WIN SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU LONDON—The careful attention pai LONDON—The careful attention paid to the organization and development of junior rugby football in Wales met with a reward recently when at Coventry before an efithusiastic crowd of some 15,000 spectators the Welsh schoolboys defeated those of England by 27 points to 0 in their annual "international." Schoolboy rugger has a thrill and abandon all its own, and on this occasion these qualities were reinforced by a high degree of skill, most of it exhibited by the visitors.

Other candidates for the distance runs are: Half-mile and mile rung J. A. Clarke '31, Glen Sherar '31, D. I. Hughes '31, H. C. Davis '31; two-mile run—E. J. Peterson '31, A. D. Hughes '31, Everett Hougland '31 and J. H. Salbakken '31. Clarke is a particularly to all opponents in freshman competition last year.

A three-event performer, C. B. Herron '30, is Coach Schlademan's main hope this year's freshman team. He recently won the National A. A. U title in the 70-yard hurdles. Hillman's main hope this year is All-corn, and the Connecticut runner has been doing consistent work during the indoor season, this being his second year as a member of the Dartmouth year and set two state interscholastic recomb ords while a high school student. D'Arcy '29, is a veteran squad member, while Dan Kaiser '30, is a broad jump candidate.

Twins Identical Runners

The Latham twins, D. A. '30 and E. H. '30, who run the 880 and mile distances, are to be counted upon for points during the spring. They are identical runners, and even Coach Hillman cannot tell them apart. They have one varsity season behind them, and they are usually point winners in all meets. E. R. Butterworth '30 and V. A. Welch '31 are Dartmouth's lone performers in the two-mile run, both being fair men.

The Dartmouth milers have already made history. Four freshmen last year all ran the mile under 4m. 31s., and although one of the quartet, William Gould '31, dropped out of college, the other three are still available. Andrews has been shifted to the 880 distance, but Lawag Piele 24 '21 and W. G.

Gould '31, dropped out of college, the other three are still available. Andrews has been shifted to the 830 distance, but James Rick 3d '31 and W. G. Huckins '31 are still listed as milers and doing very creditably.

In the weights, Dartmouth has not been strong, although a great many men are trying out for places on the team. R. S. Lyle '29 is the only veteran in the hammer throw, and he is supported by R. W. Black '29, G. D. Crosier '30 and W. O. Taylor '31.

The shot put called R. L. Maynard '31, P. H. Mayher '30, G. Bromberg '31 and A. B. Rich '31. E. H. Fyler '29 is a capable discus thrower, and V. R. King '31 has also had experience in the hammer throw. The pole vaulters are also in the uncertain stage, with three 1931 men having the call. They are A. K. Noyes '31, R. H. Barker '31 and F. B. Clarkson '31.

Dartmouth has three dual meets this spring, meeting Syracuse, Harvard and Pennsylvania. In addition to these dates, the Green will probably send a team to the Pennsylvania Relay Games on April '26, and to the Outdoor Intercollegiates on May 31.

The highly favored New York Glants went into the National League lead on Wednesday, when they defeated Philadelphia, 9 to 2, while the Boston Braves were losing to Brooklyn, 5 to 3. As usual, the Giants hit and hit hard with Ott and Jackson contributing home runs, the latter's coming with two the Giants' lineup, his showing was extremely encouraging to Manager John J. McGraw, who started the left-hander once before wthout success. Again as in two previous engagements between the two clubs, O'Doul, traded to the Phillies by the Giants last winter, hit strongly, knocking out three of his club's eight hits. In four games against the Giants O'Doul has hit four against the Giants, O'Doul has hit four singles, a double and three home runs to average .691. The Giants' one big inning was the fourth when they scored five runs.

Sored five runs.

HANOVER, N. H.—Again the Dartmouth College track team, under the tutelage of Coach Harry Hillman, seems to be made up of several stars and a great deal of uncertain but potential material. Dartmouth has not had well-rounded teams in the past few years, and Coach Hillman has had points for him in the important meets.

However, the Dartmouth aggregation has been considerably bolstered in the chicago Cubs torced Pittsburgh to the limit to take the game, 5 to 4. The winning run came in the thirteenth inning when Earl Sheely, Pittsburgh's new first baseman from Sacramento and former White Sox player, doubled to bring in Traynor. The brilliant pitching of Berlyn Horne, the young pitcher obtained by the Cubs from Jersey City, where he won 15 and lost the points for him in the important meets.

However, the Dartmouth has not been considerably bolstered for two years. Doyle, Freeman and Barre probably will draw most of the starting assignments this year, with Gilbert as relief pitcher. Doyle is a lefthander, and won all his games last season. M. A. Alspach '29 and F. R. Brandenburg '31, are other pitching candidates.

"Theoretically, we should be able to finish first or second in the Confer-ence without much trouble, but so far the team has failed to hit up to its standard of last year," Coach Corsaut says, "I've been having trouble finding a astisfactory first baseman, and sec-ond base has also troubled me quite a lot."

Corsaut has shifted H. W. Towler '30, a letterman at second base, over to first base, and put Wallace Forsberg '31 on second. After a bad start Forsberg has developed rapidly, and Towler is also learning his new position fairly well, though at bat he is having difficulty.

Captain in Right Field

Other veterans on the squad beside Fowler are L. M. Nash '30, third base; T. M. Evans '30, shortstop; R. H. Mc-Collum '30, left fielder and Capt. K. M. Ward '29, right fielder. Glenn Gilbert 30, A. "Why is there never a pear blossom festival anywhere?" I ask in a bewilderment that is perennial: "Are they not as beautiful, as delicate, as fragrant and as rare as any of the season's gifts?" It is not that I am indifferent to the snowy charms of the blossom-ing blackhearts and bird cherries in their turn, or to the pink-tinged beauty of the Baldwins, greenings, and Northern Spies at a still later date, but that these receive so much homage from the world they have no need of mine, whereas the pear

They seem to me a much neglected member—a stepchild, a sort of arboreal Cinderella, as it were—of the great orchard family. Their lineage, so far as I am able to ascertain, is not less ancient than that of their more fortunate and courted sisters; their origin is shrouded in the mists of antiquity. It would not be overpresumptuous to assume that they had a place in the first garden along with the first apple, the first peach, the first cherry, the first grape —all the favored fruits. Certainly man has carried them from home to home and garden to garden in his great western migration till they too have encircled the globe in its temperate regions. The mere fact that he has done so is honor of a kind, yet by no means comparable with that accorded the other members of their tribe. That they have been cherished we may be sure, yet in what an indifferent, perfunctory, lackadaisical sort of way! There is small comfort to be had from the declaration of some ancient herbalist that "to describe them apart, were to send owls to Athens." When did a silent admiration of the apple ever suffice its admirers? Has it not been praised and overpraised folklore of every land? The same may be said of many fruits. Has not folklore of every land? The same may be said of many fruits. Has not the peach a champion who claims it to have been the forbidden fruit of Eden? Has not the quince been conceded to have been the golden fruit of discord which caused the fall of of discord which caused the fall of Helen and of Troy? Is not the fig be-come a symbol of fruitfulness, the pomegranate of beauty? Have not the grape and the cherry—but why con-tinue? The list reveals no golden pears of youth, ner any champion who claims them to have been the treasures of the Hesperides. I appre-

References to the pear in literature are so clandestine, as it were, it is often necessary to be able to read between the lines to find a tribute involved. The keeneyed Chaucer, who missed none of the pageantry of nature, must have known them well, yet was content to tell them on his fingers like a schoolboy's lesson:

Too homely, too utilitarian for further notice, he seems to say. It is my one complaint against him. As if a blossoming pear tree is to be passed calmly by for all the daisies in the "mede." Shakespeare was slightly more complimentary if not more verbose. That he knew a few varieties by name, spoke of them as the Warden and the Poperin, argues a more intimate acquaintance, implies even a sly admiration, I think. No more is needed to persuade me that pear trees were included in the garden at New Place.

That Lamb should refer to the pears of his garden in the same familiar way is sufficient assurance of his loyalty. Whenever I think of his enormous transgression in favor of the peach, then I think of his praise of the Jargonels of Colebrooke Cottage, Colebrooke Row, Islington and am consoled. Widespread rumors that the New York Federal Reserve Bank would increase its rediscount rate after the close of the market, and that brokers' close of the market, and that brokers loans would show a large increase, were behind the selling movement. The German Reichsbank increased its rate from 6½ to 7½ per cent today, but the Bank of England made no change in its 5½ per cent rate. The view has been held in many quarters that any change in the rate here would be preceded by a change in the British rate. Call money renewed at 8 per cent but advanced to 9 in response to the heavy demand for funds for monthend payments, and new stock and bond financing. The time money market showed a firmer undertone although there was no quotable change in rates. there was no quotable change in rates commercial paper market was weeks of April were the largest of any corresponding period on record.

Columbia Graphophone and coppers led a vigorous upturn in the early part of the last hour in spite of a rise in the call money rate to 12 per cent. Shorts began to bid for American Can and United Aircraft, which was up 2 to 4 points, while the bulge in Columbia Graphophone carried it up more than 6 points. A considerable part of the early decline was made up on the rally, but several soft spots persisted, Yellow Truck breaking through 48 on large offerings. The close was irregular. Sales approximated 3,200,000 shares.

Foreign exchanges opened steady, ith sterling cables unchanged at

Bond Trading Dull

Stiffening of money rates with the approach of month-end requirements for funds prevented the bond market from making any further progress in the early trading today.

Trading was dull, and the only issues that managed to breast the adverse money currents were a few of the junior rails, securities with stockpurchase features, or those favored by special conditions.

The reversal of the recent trend toward credit easement was reflected in small demand for United States Government obligations, with consequent price fregularity. The foreign loans, affording investors higher yields than the domestic coupon securities, held steady.

In the specially favored group, Wickwire Spencer Steel first 7s and convertible 7s, in which there has been recent speculative activity, jumped on a receiver's report showing a big increase in earnings last year. The first 7s sold up more than 3 points, Cuba Cane Sugar 8s and 7s, also, rebounded further from their recent low levels on prospects of improvement in the sugar industry.

Among the junior rails, Frisco 4½s touched a new high for the year at 89½, a recent advance of more than 5 points. Missouri, Kansas & Texas adjustment 5s, Rock Island 4½s and Northern Pacific 5s also made headway in face of unevenness in the rest of the rail group.

The convertibles, most volatile of the fixed-income securities, were quiet, with little change in prices, in keeping with the irregularity of stocks.

New York Railways income 6s sank to a new low at 12½. 200 *BrunsBalke 46 ½ 45 ¼ 46 Bucyrus pf .117 117 220 Bruns Term .29 ½ 29 % 600 Bucyrus pf .117 127 200 Bruns Term .29 ½ 33 ½ 200 Bucy cv pf .43 ¼ 20 BuffRoch pf .100 100 100 Burns Br A 109 109 200 Burns Br B .30 30 300 Burnoughs .288 300 Bush Term .65 64 ½ 10 Bush T deb 108 108 10 Bush T deb 108 108 10 Bush Blg pf .113 ½ 113 ½ 12 200 Butte Cop. .7 ½ 7½ 300 Butte&Sup . 8½ 3200 By Prod Co 122 ½ 117 1500 Byers pf .112 112 110 Osl Pack . 75 ¼ 800 Callahan . .2 ½ 2½ 210 Cal Alecta . .46 ¼ 45 ½ 200 Canadadpry . .66 ¼ 45 ¼ 200 Cent Rib pf .70 ¼ 46 ¼ 100 Cav Dobbs . 32 3500 Cen Alloy . .70 ¼ 46 ¼ 100 Cav Dobbs . 32 3500 Cen Alloy . .70 ⅓ 200 Cent Rib pf .70 ⅓ 200 Childs . .60 500 Cert-Teed . .2 ½ ½ 22 ½ 500 Childs . .60 500 Cert . .67 ¼ 200 Childs . .60 500 Childs . .60 500 Cent Rib pf .10 ¼ 136 136 100 Coca Cola A 43 ¼ 43 ¼ 100 ChileNW pf .36 ¼ 136 100 Coca Cola A 43 ¼ 43 ¼ 100 ChileNW pf .36 ¼ 200 Childs . .60 500 Childs . .60

MUNICIPAL BANK AT BIRMINGHAM SHOWS PROGRESS

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITO BIRMINGHAM—The passing of the £10,000,000 mark in the deposits of the Birmingham Municipal Bank, the first and only bank of its kind in England, is the result of accumulation in roughly 10 years, during which the bank has made astonishing progress.

the bank has made astonishing progress.

No fewer than 300,000 residents of Birmingham are members of the bank, about one in three of the city's population, and the sums they have to their credit vary from a few coppers up to thousands of pounds.

An account can be opened with a penny, and a remarkable feature of the bank is the regularity with which families from the poorest districts.

the bank is the regularity with which families from the poorest districts, with an income of only two or three pounds a week deposit their coppers, sixpences, and shillings every pay day. But the bank has the support of all classes and there are 48 branches, some of which were started in shops and houses which had to be hurriedly and nouses which had to be hurriedly converted for the purpose, and there are works and school branches and thousands of home safes in use.

The bank has advanced £3,000,000 to 8000 people to enable them to purchase their homes, and of this £1,500,000 has already been repaid.

The Oil Institute directors have now decided to mark time until these conferences are completed.

In a statement issued after their meeting it was said that they would "co-operate" with the federal board in the study of the state compact program in the hope that a way could be found to end overproduction and conserving the Nation's oil resources.

"We are just as strong for conversation as ever," E. B. Resser, president of the institute, declared.

Meanwhile the institute is holding in abeyance all action upon its volunters.

producers have decided to let the Federal Oil Conservation Board make the next move in the perfecting of a scheme to limit the production of crude oil in the United States. This, in effect, was the result of an extended session of the directors and conservation committee of the American Petroleum Institute, held here. The meeting was attended by about 40 leading oil executives whose companies control the bulk of crude oil production in the United States. The group has previously devised to limit production to the 1928 levels, but this program did not win the support of the Federal Oil Conservation Board. The board replied with a

Whe: MARY STUART (Queen of

Where: Scotland. When: Sixteenth century.

Why Famous: Queen of Scotland rom babyhood and for a short period Queen of France; mother of King James VI of Scotland and I of Engand; a woman whose story has ascinated and baffled historians. As child, she was betrothed to the Dauphin of France and taken to the French court to be educated. Ten years later she was married, but the Dauphin scarcely survived his coro-nation. So Mary Stuart, still beautiful and carefree, returned to a tempestuous career in her native Scot-

Just as Mary's union with the heir of Philip II of Spain was rumored, she impulsively married her cousin, Lord Darnley; which event marked the beginning of a series of tragic mistakes. Darnley, becoming enterpolic in a plot against Bizzio the tangled in a plot against Rizzio, the Queen's Italian favorite, murdered him at Holyrood Palace. Mary seemed reconciled with Darnley, then one night in 1567 Darnley's house was blown up with Darnley inside; and Mary was so reckless as to marry almost at once the Earl of Bothwell, Darnley's murderer. The Scottish nobles turned against her,

Spring is here and we are ready to meet it with refreshing prints and a variety of individual models in plain colored silica. This, briefly, was Mary's personal and outward career, but underneath lay a deeper significance. For Mary's cause was the cause of Roman Catholic powers of Europe desiring to see England reject her Protestantism. Volumes have been written to discuss Mary's motives and acts and affections; to what degree she was herself guilty, to what and acts and anections; to what degree she was herself guilty, to what degree merely a pawn; whether or not she did connive at the murder of Darnley and in a plot to remove Elizabeth from her throne. Mary Stuart is likely to remain one of the most provocative women in history.

Prerogative The unquestionable right of asking first for any place or power might be called a prerogative, as the Latin præ, "before," and rogare, "to ask," indicate. But by usage the word seems to limit itself to the right attached to an office or rank to exercise a special privilege. We speak of the prerogative en-joyed by the Crown in cases of bankruptcy, when it is expected to pay itself first and entirely, and the pre-rogative of a father to require obedience from his children. It will thus be seen how closely connected are prerogatives and "privileges"; the one is, however, bestowed by birth or standing, the other by personal whim and may be withdrawn at any time.

A New Voice at Geneva

7HEN the political Cassandras openly predicted that the present session of the Preparatory Disarmament Commission was foredoomed to failure, they overlooked the fact that the new Chief Executive of the United States would probably choose that same session as a convenient moment for some clear pronouncement on his peace policy. Mr. Hoover was not likely to let slip so favorable an opportunity of indicating the position he intends to take in world affairs, and those who expected the futility and helplessness which characterized the discussion during the first few days to continue throughout the session have seriously misread the signs of the times.

The position of the United States in regard to disarmament was sufficiently delicate to have seriously embarrassed a statesman of smaller stature. The overwhelming success of the only partially understood Kellogg pact had been followed by the prompt enactment of the new cruiser program, and the world was left to reconcile the two démarches as best it might. But President Hoover, in setting the key for his future policy, could not afford to continue this ambiguous position. His choice lay between throwing his weight behind some practical scheme of progressive disarmament, if such could be found-leaving the Kellogg renunciation of war pact to find concrete expression as best it could as time went on—and taking his stand by the pact in the hope of bringing Europe into line with the policy. The former meant plunging back into the interminable wrangles about security margins and the turning of so-called disarmament conferences into a means of bidding for the maximum quota in the reduction scheme. The latter meant hitching the policy to a more or less indeterminate ideal, which offered the more glorious prospects, but involved a measure of enlightened statesmanship and an insight into the meaning of the new era which, with a few exceptions, national leaders have not yet been able to show.

President Hoover unhesitatingly selected the latter. His spokesman at Geneva, Hugh S. Gibson, informed his fellow delegates in outright challenging terms that the Kellogg pact was intended to be the basis of future disarmament agreements; that disarmament should be by allround reduction, not by limitation, and that discussion should be raised above all the futile wrangles and deadlocks of the past years to a new plane, based on universal friendship. Methods were of secondary importance; details did not matter, so long as the new basis of understanding was put in operation.

It is true that details must be worked over some time. Tonnage must be apportioned or some other basis for reduction must be arrived at-and Mr. Gibson's speech is not without concrete proposals in this direction. But there is all the difference in the world between reducing with the expectation that the armaments will be called upon, and reducing with the expectation that the panoply will not be used. Britain is said to have already abandoned her differences with the United States over the cruiser issue. It is an example that will spread far. If President Hoover's peace policy required statesmanship of an unusually courageous quality, challenging as it did the almost universal criticism from political realists of the Old World, that it is too idealistic for translation into political practice, justification has not been slow in coming. It is the same order of justification that supported President Coolidge and Mr. Kellogg in the peace pact and carried that instrument through to a swift conclusion. The instantaneous acclaim of public opinion in all countries is a force that sweeps the wrangles of politicians out of the path of progress. That force has already made itself felt unmistakably in support of the terms of Mr. Gibson's speech at Geneva. The political powers that set themselves against that force can be safely ignored.

President Hoover has set out to show that the great ideals'must lead and practical politics must adapt themselves to them as best they can. The world appears ready to sustain him in his claim.

A Remarkable Conversion

WING to his advanced views and the forceful language in which he usually expresses those views, A. J. Cook, the energetic secretary of the Miners' Federation of Great Britain, sometimes referred to as the "Emperor," has earned for himself the name of a Communist. But a change has come "o'er the spirit of" his "dream." That he would ever be heard publicly paying a heartfelt tribute to the royal family, or to any member of it, would have been considered as millennial an event as the consorting of the wolf and the lamb. But as a matter of fact, that is exactly what has happened. To be precise: A few days ago at a Mansion House luncheon given by the Lord Mayor of London to all the leaders who had assisted in the relief fund for the distressed miners, among others present were the Prince of Wales and Mr. Cook. In the course of a speech the miners' secretary, in paying a remarkable tribute to the Prince, said that his action in helping to relieve, the sufferers had brought the throne very near the people. Turning directly to the Prince, Mr. Cook used these words:

You, sir, have done a marvelous thing. Never was I so impressed as by your speech on Christmas night. I was with two Communist friends, and when your name was announced to speak on behalf of the miners' fund, they undoubtedly scoffed, but they listened to what you had to say, and when you had finished, with tears in their eyes, they put their hands in their pockets and gave what money they had to the fund. It was a wonderful appeal

Later, in the course of an interview, Mr. Cook said that his republicanism had been destroyed or at best he was now only a lukewarm Communist-and that the Prince of Wales was responsible for his change of heart. Strange words, indeed, to come from the lips of one who had hitherto been regarded as among the reddest of

The Proposed Nicaragua Canal

THE Panama Canal has become such an integral part of American shipping convenience that relatively few persons stop to realize how short a time it has been an accomplished fact and how long a time a canal to avoid the long trip round the coast of South America was in contemplation. More than this, fewer still probably know offhand that it was only political and international developments, and not geographical considerations, which decided that the canal joining the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans should be cut through Panama and not through Nicaragua, although the route through the latter country had really more to recommend it than had the route that was finally decided upon. Indeed, the report of the Isthmian Commission, which was presented to the Congress of the United States in 1901, and which, by the way, is still looked upon as authoritative and as furnishing the most careful survey of the entire canal situation made to date, was unqualifiedly in favor of the Nicaraguan route, which was declared to be more feasible and more practicable than the Panama route.

Perhaps one of the most striking points in connection with this interoceanic waterway question is the fact that the building of the Panama Canal has produced in one respect the very opposite result from that which was expected. It was believed by many that the completion of the canal in 1913 would settle once and for all the question of a connecting link between the two oceans. Instead, its unprecedented success has been the one factor more than any other which has made the building of a second canal almost a foregone conclusion. Notwithstanding these facts, the task which Maj.-Gen. Edgar Jadwin, chief of army engineers, has undertaken as a result of the vote by the last Congress of $150,000 for this purpose, namely, to survey the route for a Nicaraguan canal, is no small one. Within two years he must have his report ready for submission by President Hoover to Congress-a report that will cover the location, feasibility and approximate cost of an engineering feat which will range itself in the forefront of the greatest accomplishments of its nature of the present day.

There are, of course, many issues of farreaching international importance which must receive their answers before the canal can become an actuality; and because of this it is well that there will not be an outstanding need for such a canal for ten or fifteen years at least. In this day of vast expenditures the fact that the cost of the undertaking is estimated as approximately $1,000,000,000 does not carry the same meaning that it would have at the beginning of the century. Nevertheless, such a sum cannot be spent without adequate preparation and the assurance that its expenditure is really justified. That with the practical consideration of this additional interoceanic canal a step is being taken at this time in the direction of larger international expansion is, however, unques-

How Clean Is a Clean Street?

COMMITTEE called recently upon certain New York officials and asked that something be done about the streets. They are not, the committee insisted, as clean as they used to be. The officials replied, quite politely. that the streets were cleaner than ever.

"But they're not," the citizens protested. "Oh, indeed they are!" said the officials. Then someone asked: "Just how clean is a clean street?" No one knew the answer, so the committee, packed up its opinions, shook hands with the officials and went home. The problem has recurred at intervals since 1696 when the first attempt was made in New York to hire a "municipal housewife," instead of leaving the care of the streets to the individual householders. The project would have cost $150 a year, and the ordinance failed be-

Cities are now spending millions annually for street cleaning, but they utilize virtually the same "broom and dustpan" methods that have been in vogue for years. Water supply, sewerage and sanitation have been placed upon an engineering basis. In an attempt to clear the atmosphere physicists have even weighed the dust clouds in the air. But street cleaning continues largely by rule of thumb.

cause that was considered too much money.

The problem needs to be approached from the standpoint of what causes the dirt as well as of finding ways to remove it. From such a point of view it involves much more than the casual litter which must be cleared away. It embraces the study of refuse disposal, ash removal, trucking, building construction, smoke control and many allied problems which are distinctly of an engineering character. Many of these latter are due to the increasing congestion. Meanwhile the standards are rising so that what might have passed for a clean street a few decades ago is not considered a clean street today. Obviously there is a job waiting for the street-cleaning engineer.

Unemployment in Newfoundland

PPOINTMENT by the Government of New-A foundland of a commission to study the question of unemployment, and to suggest remedial legislation, acquaints the outside world with the fact that this ancient British colony has, as have so many others of the earth's regions, an idle population for whom no work can apparently be found. By the proverbial visitor from Mars, who is always assumed to be wondering how the Earthlings manage to get along with their peculiar notions of property rights and private capital, it was doubtless recorded on his return to his own planet that the Earth people were so efficient and industrious that they produced far more than they could consume, and that in consequence many of those who wished to work at making things were unable to find employment. He would be told by Earthlings whom he met that, while favorable physical conditions of climate, soil, fertility, natural mineral and forest resources, all contributed to making the support of large populations possible, it had been found that even in the most prosperous countries there were always some for whom no opportunity to work was seemingly available.

If the case of Newfoundland differs from that of such densely populated lands as Great Britain, Holland, Germany or Italy, in that its total population is very small in proportion to its area, the situation for which a remedy is sought must to a large extent be due to peculiar natural conditions. Although settled for some 300 years, the island has made little progress in the direction of manufacturing industries, outside of lumbering and paper making. Fishing, including the seal catch, remains the chief industry, but the fishing season is comparatively short, and the men engaged in it find little or nothing to do during the rest of the year. With the exception of the great iron ore deposits at Wabana, the mineral resources so far developed are small, but it is believed that further research may result in the discovery of available minerals.

By far the greater part of the island's surface either is rocky or consists of swamp and barren lands, unsuitable for agriculture, which flourishes only to a small extent. The present supply of lumber comes from a limited area, which might be greatly increased by judicious tree planting. Development of new markets for fish, and government aid in forming co-operative fishing groups, will be among the subjects discussed by the commission.

Shaking Hands 1700 Times

ONSIDERING how many persons shake hands with the President of the United States-1700 one after another on a recent occasion - the distinction seems rather attenuated. It does not appear that the individual handshaker, returning home, is thereafter held in higher honor in his own community. In a short time at most his distinction is forgotten by his neighbors unless he occasionally mentions it, and in that case they will soon wish he would forget it himself. Nor is he remembered even for a short time by the President. Neither is to the other the "false friend," to whom the poet Hood referred in a poem, but each could truthfully say:

Our hands have met, but not our hearts; Our hands will never meet again.

It may even be hazarded that if a President insisted on shaking hands 1700 times in succession with a citizen the citizen would heartily wish he would stop long before the count was completed. The first reception of citizens by a President of the United States, as report comes down, was conducted without handshaking, President George Washington recorded in his diary for Jan. 1, 1790, that various public officials "and all the respectable citizens" came between the hours of twelve and three to pay him the compliments of the season. The President bowed to the citizen; the citizen bowed to the President.

It has been somewhere said that the practice of handshaking originated at a time when two gentlemen took off steel gloves and clasped their strong right hands to show that neither had any immediately hostile, intention. The idea seems plausible. Its extension to make the shake a symbol of cordial greeting between social equals would be perfectly natural. But conditions have changed since members of the electorate began shaking hands with the President as a happy incident of a visit to Washington. There are many more handshakers. It has been evident of recent years that as the distinction lessens with the number of the distinguished the demand increases on the time and strength of a President. A Washington correspondent estimates that the time of the handshake is "scarcely more than two seconds," yet so many are the handshakers that the President may find his hand seriously incapacitated for the more important function of signing public documents. The rumor that some effort is to be made to lessen the total handshaking that has become part of the presidential office is not There is a good deal to be said for that first public reception, at which the President bowed to the citizen and the citizen bowed to the President.

Editorial Notes

According to the findings of James E. Boyce, professor of rural economy at Cornell University, milk is the most valuable product of the American farm. It may come as somewhat of a surprise to those who have generally believed corn to be the premier crop of this country, to learn that the value of corn per capita of population is but 63 per cent of that of milk. Professor Boyce lists the seven leading farm crops of the United States in the order of their value as milk, corn, hogs, cotton, hay, poultry, wheat.

An advertiser of shelled pecans tells his readers in parentheses that they are pecans without shells. On second thought the explanation doesn't seem so odd after all. A shingled roof isn't a roof without shingles.

Manchester, Eng., now has the longest railroad platform in Europe. It lacks but a few hundred feet of spanning half a mile. Think of a belated commuter chasing the 8:15 along that runway.

The city of Santiago, Chile, in providing a Children's Theater to insure wholesome entertainment for its youth, is establishing something which truly merits the name "playhouse."

Who is more imaginative—the seed catalogue artist or the "watchfully waiting" gardener?

Back to New York

By Collinson Owen

O TO New York—back to the great metropolis of a | thrills millions who are scattered far and wide, most of continent. And I was going to it now as one who knew it—slightly. As one, moreover, who had spent some months running round the United States, which doesn't happen to every visitor. I should be a rather more knowledgable American arriving now at the cathedral like Pennsylvania Railroad station than the one who had originally disembarked at a pier in the Hudson River. Not likely to be so intimidated by noise or dubious looking taxi drivers or soaring skyscrapers. So through a winter landscape and across a frozen Delaware—though not quite so frozen as is shown in the famous picture of Washington crossing it—and through New Jersey and under the river into New York, where a red-capped colored porter gathered up the various effects of one who was becoming tired of living in his trunk. It would be nice to settle down in New York for a month, and not have to bother about trains any more, and to know that some day one would merely have to take a taxi to a steamer, with Southampton as the next item of interest in the landscape. Journey's end—almost.

And in that moment of rearrival in New York it was astonishing how near England felt. It seemed to me that it was just at the other side of a ferry, that all that separated England and the United States, after all, was the mere price of a steamer ticket. This was due, no doubt to the effect of having wandered about in California and other places far off. But it was surprising for how long this feeling persisted; for how long I felt that with only a steamer trip in between-a nice comfortable steamer trip, with dance bands and a swimming pool mixed up in it—it was perfectly absurd that New York and London should not know each other as New York knows Brooklyn or London knows Brighton.

Forgetting for the time being that people pass their whole lives in London without ever going to Brighton. Forgetting, moreover, that people pass their whole lives in New York without ever going to Brooklyn.

However, for the moment it was a very pleasurable feeling. London was just over the way. Hollywood was 1,000,000 miles away.

I went to the hotel to which I had been recommended when I was in Washington, and didn't like it. A big hotel, a blatant hotel, inhabited by people who didn't appeal to me. It was a Saturday evening, and the place was full of reunions and revels and dances, from the great dining room on the ground floor to the roof garden on the thirtieth. Not that I object to such things. But I didn't like these droves of young men in squat derby hats and coon-skin coats.

Next day, in the peace of Sunday morning, I quietly but firmly set out to find another hotel. I boarded a Fifth Avenue bus, and sat down next to the only woman I knew in New York! These things really do happen. Moreover, she bore a title, so that it was all the nicer, and all the more surprising, to find her in a bus. . . . And yet Americans say that we English are not democratic! She carried me away at once to a prelunch party, where I found various people who knew people I had met in Hollywood.

Here, also, I met a New Yorker who informed me that he had hardly ever seen a sadder sight than the faces of he had hardly ever seen a sadder sight than the faces of the myriad workmen as they left one of the greatest motorcar factories in the world, where each man had been engaged on some small, simple mechanical task hour after hour and every day, and so on forever. Also of another great and famous factory—not of motorcars this time—where for greater celerity and efficiency everybody, from the highest employee down to the lowest, ran about on roller skates, with slow tracks for those who were only in a normal hurry and speed tracks for those in a desperate hurry. And he did not seem to think that these things made for an ideal existence. It is my shrewd belief that he is not the only American who thinks in the same that he is not the only American who thinks in the same

Later I found my hotel. "As close to the ground as possible," I said, feeling that man who was so near to his steamer home ought to have done with express elevators.

They told me they could only manage it on the sixteenth. And as this hotel is situated in the only square in New York that still looks a bit like a London square, and was quite a long way from the bright lights and the high lights of Broadway; the sixteenth it had to be.

And so, after circling the United States, back to my point of starting, and the inevitable comparison of my present impressions with that moment when I first made the acquaintance of New York: that far-off moment when the warning voice of well-meaning Americans was in my "Don't think that New York is America."

How right they were. Since then I had seen the vastness of Chicago, with what even a slightly jealous European eye must describe as its grandeur. I had seen the picturesqueness of San Francisco on its splendid bay, a sort of smaller New York containing a much nicer-looking population. I had breathed the languor of Los Angeles, had sampled the special flavors of Boston and New Orleans, and had seen many other cities and things. . . How ridiculous to think that "New York is America."

And yet in many ways how true. Once back in New York I realized how utterly this was the metropolis of the whole country, and how its influence penetrates every other city, and even the remotest small towns. The very thought of Broadway, the Main Street of all America, whom will never see it. In vast regions there are myriads of people to whom a trip to Chicago is life's greatest adventure; other regions, less vast, where Boston, St. Louis, San Francisco or New Orleans symbolize all the fascinations of the "big city." But New York is this for the whole continent. Everybody wants to go to Manhattan, to walk down fabled Broadway, and bathe in the radiance of its Great White Way.

And when you walk down that Great White Way at night, what do you see? Something which is bright beyond imagining, so far as electric lights are concerned, but something which is amazingly garish, with a sort of Coney Island atmosphere, and a crowd on the sidewalks which cannot by the most generous stretch of the imagination be regarded as looking like the salt of the earth.

Well, well. Anyhow there is nothing in London half so bright. If what is called "the lure of cities" consists of bright lights, then Broadway has it above all other city streets in the world.

One begins to understand why Americans who do not happen to belong to New York protest to the stranger that it is not an American city. It is the inhabitants to whom they are referring more than the city. Judged by its sky line, indeed, it is the most American thing in all

But as regards very large numbers of its population it is still-more than any other place in the United States -Zangwill's "Melting Pot," and the process of melting has still a very long way to go, perhaps several hundred Strolling along Broadway-or very near it-I turn into that most astonishing of all picture houses, the Roxy. To say that it has the vastness of a cathedral does not convey enough. American buildings have put this simile quite out of date. In future, cathedrals will have to depend for their impressiveness not on size, but on quite other attributes, which is perhaps nothing to worry about so far as the cathedrals are concerned.

I become a tiny unit in the vast audience. Far away below is the stage, a very large stage, but looking quite small. The film part of the program happens to be banal enough. But there is much more besides the pictures. including a number of costume tableaus, beautifully staged, portraying various fairy tales, accompanied by traditional English airs. And looking down on this, as one of some thousands of New Yorkers, it occurred to me how nearly everything that was being seen and heard, costumes and all, derived directly from England or Europe, and were yet as familiar to this American audience as peanuts or ice cream sundaes. And I began to muse deeply on this theme.

Later, leaving the incandescent glare of Broadway behind me, I departed for a club where I was a guest; a place where artists, actors, writers and others met, and where the atmosphere was very much what one finds in London. It was a night devoted to an annual ceremony, now become a tradition; a dinner-jacket night, in what had been an old-fashioned residence-1830 or thereabouts of many memories. It is not too easy to find this sort of thing in New York.

A buffet, beautifully arrayed, the chatter of men, and about as much American accent, all told, as would fill an egg cup. In short, although 95 per cent of all these men were Americans, it might have been a gathering somewhere off the Strand, which is not intended as a compliment or otherwise, but merely as a statement of fact.

Later in the proceedings somebody sat down at the piano and began to play Gilbert and Sullivan. And instantly the choruses were taken up. Everybody knew them:

That every boy and every gal,
That's born into this world alive,
Is either a little Liberal,
Or else a little Con-ser-va-tive.

Strange to hear this in New York. Stranger things still were to happen. Some time later another member sat down and played various songs of Kipling's. He knew them all, and so did most of the others. But the outstanding event of the evening, or morning, was his singing of "Route Marchin" to a setting of his own; a splendid setting, rollicking and inspiring, so that it caught the very tramp of a British regiment marching across dusty India, and he was made to sing it again and again:

We're marchin' on relief over Injia's coral strand. Eight 'undred fightin' Englishmen, the Colonel and the which as something that happened in Little Ol' New York was really very astonishing, and it is impossible to say what keen atavistic emotions these words were arousing in the breasts of men whose connection with England was for the most part very far back.

1 1 1 Like being at home, and in some ways more so. And I could not help reflecting, as the music and the singing continued, that three or four blocks away from this spontaneous English festival I should find myself in the midst of a teeming population of "foreigners" who certainly would not be sentimentally moved by any English song whatever and who yet, politically, were just as American as any of these men gathered round the piano.

Which is the sort of fact that an English observer of the United States must very soon notice, and one to which his thought will constantly return.

Mirror of the World's Opinion

The opinions expressed in the quotations hereunder do not necessarily carry the indorsement of the Monitor.

By Way of Comparison

CONTRAST would perhaps be a better word than comparison-so great is the difference. We refer to The Christian Science Monitor when placed side by side with the small circle of other newspapers with which we are e have been reading the Monitor about two months. In that length of time we do not recall to have seen one flaming headline. The news of the day is given in soher fashion. Nothing screams. Certainly matters of indiffer ent concern are not blazoned across the front page though they were things of state, national, or internaimportance. There is balance, proportion, poise. And yet the full news of the world is brought in comprehensive, compact form-the things that really matter

Crime is not a major item. It is never spectacularly displayed. It presents the news, but does not make heroes of the miscreants. Reading this periodical, you well-nigh forthat such horrible things are so common. It does not tend to make the readers first "endure, then pity, then embrace." The law takes toll of its violators, but this does not seem a supreme concern. Nauseating details are entirely lacking. There is no romance about being electrocuted. Scandal is never exploited. The privacy of the ual, the sanctity of the domestic circle, is not invaded and paraded. The salacious is not served as though it a dainty morsel for the public appetite. Sports are kept in bounds. The heroes the gridiron, the court, the ring, the links, all other varieties, are not promenaded as people of much consequence; are not played up as though fit ideals for emulation. They are not pedestaled in print and do not summon obeisance from all observers. In its own department such events have place, but even here none of them seems of such towering importance as to demand unusual tribute of space or pageantry.

In all of its news space there is nothing to offend the literary, the æsthetic, or the moral taste-pothing cheap, nothing sensational, nothing coarse, certainly nothing

Editorially it is superb. It treats an amazing variety of subjects and evinces an amazing scope of knowledge and grasp of events. It resembles a review in its comnsiveness and treatment. And it is always on morally constructive side. As to prohibition, it is a strong and continuous champion.

It has no Sunday issue. It does not bring a big bulk of mingled good and evil—with the hurtful preponderating—into our homes on Sunday. It does not violate the sanctity of the day by commandeering a large company of people—with boys in the majority—for Sunday work;

and by intruding into the day set apart for spiritual culture distracting thoughts which militate against the highest soul use of the Sabbath. There are other features of value; other departments

But we are speaking only of the news features. Propaganda? We suppose so. To advance Christian Science, we suppose, is one prominent purpose of its publication. But this idea is not featured. Except the name of the paper, there is little to exhibit this particubelief. There is one article in each issue in modest ar belief. There is one article in each loss. But it does betting which seeks to advance this desire. But it does intrude itself upon the attention. You can find it if you wish. Beyond that, this cult does not figure any more prominently than it does in other periodicals. For our part we are willing to take its propaganda though we have no sympathy with Christian Science as a religious faith—or the propaganda of any other like cult, if necessary, to get this kind of newspaper. We are periodically disgusted with the type of journalism to which the public has to submit. Periodically, did we say? Perhaps perpetually would be a better word, since the periods are so frequent that they almost overlap. The cheap, sensational, disproportioned, immodest, coarse, debauching type of journalism of this day exploiting the inconsequential, the ugly, the criminal, deteriorating, the socially, civilly, patriotically, morally, spiritually disintegrating-is nauseous. Is there no relief? Is there no person or company of persons who are so interested in the public welfare, who so appreciate the power of the daily press, that they will venture and, if necessary, endure financial loss to make a paper of this general character of such proportions that it will challenge general attention? We may have such papers in Georgia already, but they are of such modest equipment that they cannot command state-wide attention. We are not suggesting a financial investment; we are pleading for a missionary enterprise. It might be financially profitable (we are not informed concerning The Christian Science Monitor) eventually if not immediately. But that is not the primary impulse. We are pleading for a paper of such excellence as a news medium that its merit will command attention, but also of such superior type that it may not command general support. We are pleading for a paper which does not give the public "what it wanta," but what it ought to want—with the hope it may eventually build a public taste that will want what it ought to have.
